

Price of aluminum sheet for distribution boxes

AI Overview

Aluminum sheet prices for distribution boxes typically range around $2,950 per ton globally, with variations depending on alloy, thickness, and supplier. Current Market Overview The global aluminum sheet market is stable but sensitive to raw material and energy costs. In early 2024, aluminum prices averaged $2,950 per ton, reflecting fluctuations in energy and supply chain conditions. Prices are influenced by the type of alloy, sheet thickness, and whether the material is primary or recycled aluminum, with recycled content reducing emissions and sometimes cost. Supplier Options Online Metals offers cut-to-size aluminum sheets in alloys such as 3003 (general-purpose, corrosion-resistant) and 6061 (structural, high strength-to-weight ratio), with thicknesses from 0.016" up to 14". Pricing varies by thickness, alloy, and quantity, and customers are encouraged to request a quote for precise costs. Distribution International supplies corrugated, box rib, and flat sheets suitable for electrical enclosures, with standard sizes like .016" x 36" x 100'. Prices depend on sheet type and order volume. DigiKey provides pre-fabricated aluminum boxes and enclosures, which may include distribution box-ready options, with pricing available directly on their website. Factors Affecting Cost Alloy Selection: 3003 is common for corrosion resistance; 6061 is stronger and suitable for structural applications. Sheet Thickness: Thicker sheets increase material cost. Customization: Cut-to-size, perforated, or coated sheets may carry additional charges. Certifications: ASTM B209, ISO 9001, and RoHS compliance can affect pricing. Volume: Bulk orders often reduce per-unit cost. Practical Advice For distribution boxes, 3003 or 5052 aluminum sheets are typically preferred due to corrosion resistance and workability.
